The specifications call for complete fire-proofing and renovation a complete fire-proofing and renovation of the building, and a general interior rearrangement. From basement to garret the structure has been internally renewed, wood being replaced everywhere by brick, iron, terra cotta, tiles or cement. The old Senate chamber and cloak room and gallery on the south side of the building have disappeared, and the space has been cut up into four or five rooms. The rotunda has a framework of steel, and tile or cement floors have everywhere replaced wood. The interior stairway has been removed to the east side of the structure, and the devator will ascend from the west side. From the rotunda, passages or vestibules lead eastward and westward into the Senate chamber and the hall of the House of Delegates, the Senate chamber being on the west.

Some of the men received her graciously, but the others objected, and within a minute a row was in progress. The waiters crowded around the table and ordered the disturbers to leave. The men then turned on the walters. One of the strangers, according to the story told by the men held as witnesses, drew a long knife and plunged its full length into Joyce's breast and through his heart, and then into Weston and Doyle. The crowd saw Joyce fall. They ran for the exits and the men and woman, who had caused the disturbance, went with them, and scattered in all directions before the alarm was given and the police reached the
